

Oh spirit of the desert
Of the mountains and the sky
We give our brother's body back to you
To feed this tree and the grass,
The deer and the lion,
And all other things, big and small,
That live in this land and need us,
As we need them.

Where this man's spirit has gone
We do not know
But we shall remember him
For as long as we can
And when we forget, as we must,
Everything that has happened,
We too will be part of the earth
And the worlds to come,
Until we arrive once more
At the beginning again.
